

CYCLE, RUN, SWIM AND, ER, CAB

"You'll never guess who I had in the front of my cab." Not quite the line you usually hear from cab drivers, but words that could have been uttered by Frogmore's Paul White this week. The developer sponsored Britain's golden boy of triathlon long before anyone knew who Alistair Brownlee was. Now, with a Olympic gold medal in his hand and potentially another to come in Rio, Brownlee decided to turn his hand to cabbie-ing. At a party hosted by Frogmore this week, with Brownlee as guest of honour, the champ told of when he was in the back of a London cab during the triathlon world championship series. The driver was moaning about Hyde Park being closed off for a race. After much whinging, he asked Brownlee what he did. I'm an Olympic triathlete, he answered.
